The Indiana Association of Historians

The Indiana Association of Historians, founded in 1980, is dedicated to promoting the study and enjoyment of history. The IAH brings together educators, scholars, genealogists, archivists, public historians, librarians, and the interested public in pursuit of history. Since 1981, the IAH has been attracting those interested in history from across the state and nation to its annual meeting. In addition to its annual meeting, the IAH sponsors a public lecture, hosted by Butler University. The Thornbrough Lecture, named in honor of Emma Lou and Gayle Thornbrough, both among the founders of the IAH, invites some of the leading practitioners of the historical craft working on subjects of broad interest and appeal.
